Users and Servers Report

Infinity IRC has now been around in it's current form for approximately 6 months. I am writing this report to inform readers of how we are doing in the line of users and servers.

Let's start on a highly positive note, with the status of our servers. When the network was started in it's current form, it ran mainly on home servers. Our co-owner then donated a VPS, and since then we have acquired more VPS', IRCd shells and even dedicated servers, and have been able to scrap home servers completely, allowing us to offer out users a more stable and reliable service than ever before. We currently have 7 servers, and an 8th one is being set up as I type this report. This is made up of 5 UK servers and 2 US servers. The 8th server will be based in Hungary, and therefore should offer a better connection to the network for out european users.

Moving on, we also have incredibly good news from a users point of view. Our network has grown more and more over the past few months, and the graph below courtesy of SearchIRC.com indicates how much larger the user-base has got.

Despite the drop around late February/early March we can see that overall the network has grown an incredible amount, and will likely continue to do so if things keep going as they are now.

Overall, I am overwhelmed at the good news I am able to bring with this report, and hopefully things will continue to grow, and we will continue to provide a rock solid, stable service to our users. Hope you enjoyed reading, and see you in the next 6-monthly report (and of course on Infinity IRC).

Kindest Regards,
Henry Cole
